FOREWORD

By James B. Hunt, Jr.
Former Governor
State of North Carolina

It has been my privilege to learn close-up about a unique public-private partnership created to join the energy and resources of business with those of public education to build “the most advanced public education system in North Carolina.” By any standard, that is not a modest ambition. Nonetheless, the collective will of the community to improve the quality of public education in Pitt County (North Carolina) has been captured in an initiative created and spearheaded by the Greenville-Pitt County Chamber of Commerce. It is know locally as Partners in Education (PIE).

THE CHRONICLES OF PIE is a historical accounting of the formation and first years of that partnership. It describes the process by which the Chamber engaged community leaders in high levels of interaction with educators and administrators in the Pitt County Schools. The results of that engagement, and the attendant commitment to the pursuit of excellence in every sphere of education, have been astounding.

The parts and pieces of PIE were created and implemented by highly motivated citizens with a strong commitment to raising the level of opportunity and achievement for every child in every school in Pitt County. Their story is worth telling to people across this country, because it is built upon a purpose and a process that can be replicated in almost any community in almost any state.

I am happy to commend the process and to applaud its outcome. It is a compelling account of remarkable achievement in one school system in one county in North Carolina. It is also a description of something that could be happening in school systems all across America.

Preface

Every cause must have a champion. In this case, there were many, but, truly, a few who stand out.

When I was hired in December of 2001, the Chamber leaders already knew that they wanted education to be priority one for the Greenville-Pitt County Chamber of Commerce. To build a business-education partnership program second-to-none was a goal already established and a challenge set forth to me to be a part of the leadership team to make it happen.

Having a true passion for education and having just enough experience under my belt to think I knew what I was doing, I jumped at the chance to meet this challenge. And what an honor it was to be thrown in the ring with leaders of the highest calibre who weren't just interested, but were willing to go the extra mile, to even fall on their swords if need be for education and who demonstrated a passion and a commitment beyond any I had ever seen.

With truly engaged and dedicated volunteer leaders like Larry Seigler and Joel Butler (the sequential Chamber Chairmen) combined with the wisdom and experience of Janice Faulkner (our mother facilitator!) along with the encouragement and team-attitude of a first-class school superintendent, Dr. Michael Priddy, and a long line of doers like Frances Faust, Alice Keene, Randy Collier and Wanda Bunch, we could not lose.

But perhaps none of us even imagined that we would win as big as we did. Today, Partners in Education is a model in North Carolina for the successful marriage of business and education. In October, 2003, we proudly accepted the Governor's Education First Award. And we carry the Partners torch proudly as we continue to help build and grow our school system into the best because of the care and commitment of business.

As we dedicate the writing of this document – which serves as a how-to guide as well as the documentation of critical history – we salute and thank its writer, the Honorable Janice Faulkner. After a prestigious career in education, she embarked upon a second career as public servant, having served in three very important state roles (see author's bio). Now, we fondly refer to her as “our” public servant emeritus as she continues to walk the walk and make her mark on Pitt County and Eastern North Carolina.

Thank you, Janice, for the Chronicles of PIE.

Chapter One

THE PARTNERSHIP

A significant role of the Greenville-Pitt County Chamber of Commerce – as stated in its mission -- is that of supporting constructive initiatives on major issues of public policy. The Chamber recognizes that Pitt County schools help to produce the quality workforce necessary to attract business and industry to the county. It also acknowledges that the Pitt County school system is the third largest employer in the county. Thus it was appropriate for the Chamber to make education its top priority for the year 2002.

In the fall of 2001, the Chamber sponsored a one-day public forum on public education. That meeting was basically a gathering of the Chamber's Board of Directors and members of the business community who were also supporters of the schools. One recommendation brought forward from that event was the creation of a Business-Education Compact to support the school system. The implementation of that recommendation spawned an initiative that has led to something much bigger and broader than perhaps the original conveners of that forum had foreseen.

Under the direction of Chamber President Susanne Sartelle (who was hired in December 2001), staff developed a concept paper for the creation of an initiative to be called Partners in Education (PIE). PIE was envisioned as an umbrella program for business-education partnerships designed to engage the business community in active support of public education. It was further intended to ultimately integrate other entities such as the faith-based community in the same common goal.

The goal was not a modest one. It aimed to join the energy and resources of the business community with the education system in order to build “the most advanced public education system in North Carolina.” That height of excellence was to be achieved by raising the level of opportunity and achievement for every child in every school.

The partnership was to pursue goals that directly impacted workforce development. Specifically, PIE would support the school system's efforts to raise performance standards. It would assist schools in meeting or exceeding those standards and help students to prepare for, and successfully complete, further education to enable them to find employment as productive members of the workforce.

A first step for PIE was to engage high profile community leaders in higher levels of interaction with educators and administrators in the schools. With that goal in mind, the Chamber created an oversight group – the Education Cabinet -- to assure a successful merger of the vested interests in both business and education.

The original Cabinet consisted of ten persons whose names would lend credibility to both the program and the process. In addition, key ex-officio members represented East Carolina University, Pitt Community College, county and city government, the faith community, and other organizations whose participation in the work of the cabinet would expand community involvement in the program.

The original design of Partners in Education included that project and program support would be provided by the Chamber's Education Excellence Committee, which was tasked with planning and implementing the decisions and policies set forth by the Cabinet.

The second step was an internal one. The Chamber expanded the Education Excellence Committee by making key appointments so that more than half of the members were representatives of the business community. It had originally been mostly comprised of educators. Upon completion of the new structure, the Committee was charged with the responsibility of setting up the following subcommittees: 1) Program Research would compile a list of all programs providing support for public education. 2) Business-Education Partnership would design and implement a partnership agreement with businesses, including a system of rewards and recognition. 3) The Compact subcommittee would draft a document (a business-education compact) to be used as an instrument of engagement to solicit pledges of support from the business community for public schools. 4) The Summit subcommittee would plan and host a public summit on education.

Over a period of about three months, the separate pieces of the Partners in Education initiative began to come together into a coherent whole. An inventory of existing support programs was compiled. A cabinet of 20 business, education and religious leaders (and 4 advisory members) was recruited and duly appointed. A compact document was drafted. And an event was planned and scheduled for the official unveiling of PIE.

On April 30, 2002, the Greenville-Pitt County Chamber formally announced the formation of Partners in Education during the first meeting of the new cabinet at Wellcome Middle School. The cabinet's first goal was to promote the Business-Education Compact as an official agreement on how businesses would work with the schools.

Consistent with the intent of the partnership to become an umbrella program, Chamber officials also announced sponsorship of a pilot program called "Leaders for Lunch." In partnership with Communities in Schools, it was designed to immediately bring business into the schools and was the first "partnership" of the Partners program. Seven local business people, including the Chairman of the Chamber, were meeting weekly with at-risk students at Wellcome Middle School to "eat lunch and to talk" one-on-one. That modest pilot has grown into an active program at multiple schools involving numerous leaders.

Leaders for Lunch was just the beginning. One of the first goals of the Cabinet was to recruit businesses to get involved in schools in whatever ways they were willing -- time, money, materials -- as a part of the Partners initiative. In pursuit of that goal, PIE developed an all-encompassing business-education partnership called OASIS (Organizations/Businesses Assisting Schools in Success). In simple terms, OASIS was born as the recognition component of PIE. Participating businesses would be awarded points based upon volunteer hours, financial contributions or gifts in kind. Points would be accumulated on a yearly basis, and partners would be publicly recognized at the annual Education Summit.

It was the goal of cabinet members to sign on 50 businesses within the year after the fall summit of 2002. By the time the 2003 summit was held in late October, the number was closer to 80. By the 18-month mark, it was well over 100.

Having created a cabinet whose members were prominent leaders in the business community and having developed a system of recognition and reward for participation in a compact, the Chamber was ready to roll out that compact in a red-letter convocation.

The summit of 2002 was an unprecedented event. With more than 200 persons present, the ceremonial signing of the Business-Education Compact made September 24 a significant and historic day for public education in Pitt County.

That first full-fledged summit was developed around a theme entitled “Planning for Prosperity: No Business Left Behind.” Sponsored by DSM Pharmaceuticals, Inc., the summit attracted participants from business, government, civic and faith communities along with educators who discussed the state of education in Pitt County, the vision beyond the current status, and how partnerships might be established and implemented.

The keynote speaker, former Governor James B. Hunt, Jr. said of the event: “This educational summit is monumental. I don’t know of a place in North Carolina where all the communities have come together to have every child learning and forming compacts with the business and faith communities.”

A highlight of the summit was the public signing of the Business-Education Compact. The signature of the former governor was the first entered on the document. Other signatures were those of the president and the chairman of the board of the Chamber, the chairman of the education cabinet, the chairman of the Pitt County Board of education, and the superintendent of Pitt County Schools.

Noted author, public philosopher and motivational speaker Dr. Tom Morris rounded out the day’s schedule with a presentation based upon his current book, “The Art of Achievement.” Morris is a popular headliner at executive conferences and corporate events around the world.

PIE is a work in progress. The most recent addition to the menu of options for OASIS participants is a program designed to create a Business Alliance for each school. The Alliance will give members of the business community the option to join a team of business persons pledged to provide support for a specific school. That support may be offered via in-kind gifts and services, school supplies, tutoring, mentoring, job shadowing, on-site visits, or other means of expanding and enriching educational experience for school children. A pilot project has been organized at Ayden-Grifton school. The ultimate goal is to build a site-specific Alliance for every high school in Pitt County. Provided the pilot project is successfully in place, the Business Alliance initiative will go countywide during the next academic year.

PIE offers any and every interested party a means to become actively engaged in the building of “the most advanced public school system in North Carolina.” The separate parts and pieces of PIE were created, and they have been implemented by highly motivated citizens with creative energy, outstanding leadership skills, and strong commitments to public service. A vision captured by one generation becomes a dream realized by the next, and those engaged in PIE have captured a vision. PIE seeks to realize the full potential of that dream by means of a powerful partnership. What follows is a description of how the parts and pieces of PIE have been put together.

Chapter Two

THE CREATION OF THE EDUCATION CABINET

When the Greenville-Pitt County Chamber of Commerce created Partners in Education (PIE), it was envisioned as an umbrella program under which the business community in the county would become actively involved in supporting public education. The official instrument of agreement between participating businesses and the Chamber was to be a document called the Business-Education Compact.

The project could not be implemented without the formation of a recruiting team to solicit the participation of members into the relationship. Thus the Education Cabinet came into being. Chamber members involved in this highly ambitious undertaking recognized that its strength and its energy would lie in the hands of those who would lead it. The identification and recruitment of members of this first cabinet did not follow the traditional route.

Rather than make a random list of names of prospective members based upon their public visibility, their status in the community, or their availability to be volunteers to worthy causes, the work group participated in a facilitated brain storming session in which they identified the skills and talents that the job would require. They knew that membership on the Cabinet must be broad-based so that it would be representative of community stake-holders in the work that it would be doing. From that discussion, they identified and developed consensus on a list of credentials and qualifications that they deemed to be ideal. That list included:

- Member of the Chamber of Commerce
- Willingness to attend meetings
- Dynamic
- Influential
- Powerful
- Credible
- Committed to the task
- Belief in the cause

It was also determined that Cabinet members should represent or have reach into several facets of the Pitt County community, including:

- Education (University, Community College, School System)
- Business & Industry
- Faith Community
- Local Government
- Parents
- Health Care
- Retirees

A final phrase was added to the page: “Balance to assure diversity.”

It was then, and only then, that the names of specific persons were put forward. Who could best represent the medical community? Did they need a lawyer on the cabinet? What type of business experience would be the best match with public support of the schools? What was the right mix of small business and large industry? The names of many of the most prominent citizens found their way into a mix of more than forty recommendations.

Having already identified the interests that the Cabinet would be representing, the next step was to match the names of prospective appointees with those interests and then decide who might be the strongest, most active representative of the particular demography. Work group members privately made their own choices. They took a “lobbying” break and discussed the strengths of their favorites in full understanding that they were aiming for an ideal, that is, the strongest team of advocates for public education that could be assembled.

When they reassembled, the facilitator recorded a list of the nominees. Each member of the group was asked to select a first, second, and third choice. Once the work group reached consensus on a list of the best prospects, they struck an agreement to invite those persons to become members of Pitt County’s first Education Cabinet. (The recommended list and the work group member who volunteered to recruit them are officially recorded in minutes of the Retreat/Education Summit Steering Committee meeting of January 8, 2002).

Members of the recruiting team identified the next step as clearly defining the expectations, including duties and responsibilities for prospective cabinet members, so that communication from the Chamber about the projected role of the new cabinet would be clear and consistent.

A steering committee led by then-Chamber Board Chairman Joel Butler and immediate past Chairman Larry Seigler developed a recruiting document defining the governance structure of the Cabinet and setting forth the projected duties and responsibilities of its members. Thus armed, they went into the business community to make their pitch.

Prospective members were told that the Education Cabinet was being formed to create and to champion a Business-Education Compact. They would work to raise community awareness of the need for a Compact, negotiate agreements with prospective partners, monitor implementation strategies, and track community and government efforts to support the Compact. They would also work to engage the faith community as a partner in public education.

Members of the Cabinet would be expected to attend quarterly half-day meetings, participate in the Annual Education Summit, engage the support of business, industry, and government in Compact activities, present the Compact agenda before community stakeholders in public forums, seminars, and civic meetings, and work to build private financial support for Partners in Education. Each member of the Cabinet would also be encouraged to participate in PIE.

The recruiting team ultimately named 10 members appointed by the Chamber, 10 asked to serve by virtue of position, and four advisory members.

See Addendum I for a roster of the original Cabinet members.

The Chamber named Larry Seigler as Chairman of the newly formed Cabinet. The inaugural meeting was held on Tuesday, April 30, 2002, at Wellcome Middle School. In his opening remarks, Chairman Seigler described the initiative as one undertaken “to join the energy and resources of the business community with systems of education to raise the level of opportunity and achievement for every child in public education in Pitt County.” Chamber

Chairman Butler charged cabinet members to help achieve educational excellence by committing themselves to establishing Pitt County Schools as “the most advanced education system in North Carolina...a world-class system.”

In an inaugural address to the membership, Dr. Michael Priddy, superintendent of Pitt County Schools, noted that the keys to success in public schools are: high expectations for students, staff, and parents; connections to the world of work; ample resources; community oriented schools; quality personnel; state-of-the-art technology; effective partnerships with the business and faith communities; and, for Pitt County Schools, productive connections to Pitt Community College and East Carolina University.

The next steps for members of the inaugural Cabinet were two. They would build partnerships by recruiting members to sign a compact pledging their support for the schools and they would deliver a summit on the status of education in Pitt County, at which the Business-Education Compact would be publicly unveiled.

In 2004, an official governance structure was written and adopted for the Cabinet. It is included in Addendum I following the original cabinet listing.

Chapter Three

THE BUSINESS-EDUCATION COMPACT

The Chamber-sponsored Business-Education Compact is a formal agreement under which leaders in business and education promise to team up to improve education opportunities for students in Pitt County. Under the Compact, the 800-plus members of the Chamber of Commerce pledge to provide volunteers, funds and other resources to help the schools train a workforce for the future. (See Addendum II).

After months of preliminary planning and securing commitments and support, the Chamber brought the Compact into official existence at the Education Summit at Rock Springs Center on September 24, 2002. In a public ceremony before a crowd of more than 200 people, community leaders signed the compact with the goal of helping the schools to prepare students for their future in the workplace. It was the first of its kind in North Carolina.

Former Governor James B. Hunt, Jr. was the summit’s keynote speaker and official witness of the compact. The former governor’s signature was the first to be affixed to the document. The Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Greenville-Pitt County Chamber, the Chairman of the Education Cabinet, the President of the Chamber, the Chairman of the Pitt County Board of Education, and the Superintendent of Schools signed the Compact committing pledges of support from the private sector. The Compact binds the schools to utilizing that support for recruiting and retraining quality educators, engaging community leaders in programs to help students meet their full potential, improving test scores, meeting or exceeding performance standards, assisting students in workforce readiness, helping students prepare for direct entry into the workforce, and helping students prepare for pursuit of higher education and employment in a global workforce.

Praised far and wide by business leaders as an innovative way for the business community to support the public schools, the compact has spurred the participation of more than 100 private sector entities. In 2002, Wes Wheeler, then-president and CEO of the summit's sponsor, DSM Pharmaceuticals, said of the summit and of the compact, "we're privileged, honored and obliged to be here with you to support this event. We look forward to the partnership, and most importantly, we look forward to the results."

DSM Pharmaceuticals has also contributed money and leadership for a summer science camp for 40-middle school students.

The excellence of the Business-Education Compact idea and the success of its implementation were formally recognized by the nomination of Partners in Education for the Governor's Education First Partnership Award in 2003. Pitt County Schools and the Greenville-Pitt County Chamber were jointly honored as recipients of that award, presented at the Meet in the Middle Conference held in Charlotte on October 31, 2003. The award recognizes those whose involvement in advocacy and support for public schools has significant and measurable impact on student achievement and has the potential to be duplicated across the state. Superintendent Michael Priddy and Cabinet Chairman Larry Seigler received the award on behalf of the member partners.

Chapter Four

OASIS

(ORGANIZATIONS/BUSINESSES ASSISTING SCHOOLS IN SUCCESS)

At the core of Partners in Education is OASIS (Organizations/Businesses Assisting Schools in Success), a program sponsored jointly by the Greenville-Pitt County Chamber and the Pitt County Schools to encourage business and industry to contribute time and resources to public schools and to provide recognition and rewards for their contributions. Partnerships developed through OASIS strengthen and enhance the educational experience of students.

The program identifies opportunities for service to the schools in broad categories based upon the expressed needs for volunteers and resources in the schools. Opportunities vary from school to school, depending on grade level, needs, and volunteer management in each school.

The spectacular success of OASIS is based upon its flexibility. Partners with employees willing to donate time as volunteers may be tutors, mentors, speakers and lecturers, technical assistants with technology applications, staff for special events like science fairs, and field days, coaches, chaperones and classroom helpers. Businesses, large or small, may provide placement for apprenticeships and cooperative education programs and offer their work places as community based training sites. They are encouraged to provide sponsorships for athletic and cultural events, and for special projects. They may opt to give donations for school supplies, playground equipment, prizes for special events, beautification/landscaping projects, or to provide funding for special events.

Participating businesses are awarded service points based upon volunteer time, donations of money, gifts in kind, or any combination thereof. The accumulated points earn them recognition as Exemplary Partners, Partners of Distinction, or Partners of Excellence. The number of points a business must earn to become a partner is pro-rated against the size of the business or the number of employees. For example, a business with 1-10 employees must earn only 150 points to be recognized as a Partner of Excellence, while a business with more than 500 employees needs 7,500 points to earn that recognition. Each qualifying organization receives a special certificate or a plaque acknowledging its achievement.

OASIS was launched at the 2002 Education Summit. It has clearly solidified the role of school-business partnerships and heightened community awareness of the needs of the schools. It has also provided a new avenue for sharing needs, making connections, and acknowledging the contributions of business and industry to the vitality of the public schools.

During the first year PIE celebrated the contributions of 77 OASIS partners representing all levels of business, industry, civic groups, faith-based organizations, and interested individuals. On October 7, 2003, the highlight of the annual Education Summit was the OASIS luncheon during which those 77 participants were recognized for the contributions they had made to the program's first year. Awards were presented to five Exemplary Partners, to five Partners of Distinction, and to 30 Partners of Excellence, which is the highest category of recognition.

In less than 18 months, OASIS partners numbered well over 100. OASIS partners are responding routinely to the needs identified by staff who manage the program for the schools. It is by all measures an outstanding initiative with unlimited potential to provide numerous resources to students in all of the Pitt County Schools.

See Addendum III for examples of OASIS partners and contributions.

Chapter Five

THE EDUCATION SUMMITS

Upon the birth of Partners in Education, it was decided that an annual event would be held to focus on education, to encourage business involvement and to report on progress of the schools.

The annual Education Summit is the primary means by which the Greenville-Pitt County Chamber raises public awareness of PIE. It also provides a public forum for discussion of timely issues and for presentation of current information about the status of public education at the local, state, and national level.

The first summit was developed around a theme entitled "Planning for Prosperity: No Business Left Behind." The theme was rather fitting as No Child Left Behind was becoming a household phrase. Sponsored by DSM Pharmaceuticals, Inc., the summit fulfilled its purpose to engage partners in the business, government, civic, and faith communities in discussion of the state of education in Pitt County, the expansion of vision beyond the current model, and the establishment and implementation of business-education partnerships.

Held on September 24, 2002, at Rock Springs Center in Pitt County, that summit was an outstanding success by all accounts. The keynote speaker was former Governor of North Carolina James B. Hunt, Jr., nationally renowned for his advocacy of public education as the key to economic prosperity. Of the event he said: "This educational summit is monumental. I don't know of a place in North Carolina where all the communities have come together to have every child learning and forming compacts with the business and faith communities."

The summit also attracted another nationally known figure in the person of Tom Morris, a noted author and motivational speaker. Morris based his presentation on his highly acclaimed book entitled "True Success: A New Philosophy of Excellence." He is a popular headliner at executive conferences and corporate events around the world and author of the best-seller "If Aristotle Ran General Motors." His current bestseller, "The Art of Achievement," was featured in a book signing at the conclusion of the summit day.

The national reputations of the speakers notwithstanding, the real highlight of the Summit was the public signing of the Business-Education Compact. In ceremony before a crowd of more than 200 people, community leaders signed the compact with the goal of helping Pitt County schools prepare students for their future in the workplace. It was the first of its kind in North Carolina.

The former governor's signature was the first to be affixed to the document. He was the official witness. The Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Greenville-Pitt County Chamber, the Chairman of the Education Cabinet, the President of the Chamber, the Chairman of the Pitt County Board of Education, and the Superintendent of Schools signed the Compact committing pledges of support from the private sector and acceptance of that support by the schools.

A segment of the program featured presentations by Superintendent of Pitt County Schools Dr. Michael Priddy, East Carolina University Chancellor Dr. William Muse, and Pitt Community College President Dr. Charles Russell. Luncheon speaker was John Dornan, President of the Public School Forum of North Carolina. Dornan's topic was No Child Left Behind and was among the first presentations of the issue in a public venue. Dornan outlined the provisions of the Act and provided the opportunity for the public to begin to grasp the implications of this legislative act on local school systems.

Another highlight of the day's program was the unveiling of a new Business-Education Partnership Recognition Program called OASIS (Organizations/Businesses Assisting Schools in Success). The goal was established that OASIS would grow to include 50 business partners helping schools within a one-year period of time.

With the passing of that one year, OASIS exceeded that goal, and at the Second Annual Education Summit, held on October 7, 2003, 77 OASIS partners were recognized and rewarded for their support of schools.

The second year summit was again attended by more than 200 business persons and educators. Presentations again included the annual state-of-the-public-schools update from Superintendent Dr. Michael Priddy as well as comments from leaders of East Carolina University and Pitt Community College. State Board of Education Chairman Howard Lee joined the festivities as speaker and the Governor's Education Advisor J. B. Buxton made an appearance to present the good news and recognize Pitt County Schools of Excellence and Schools of Distinction. Buxton also delivered the exciting news that Pitt County Schools had been chosen as the first grant recipient of Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation dollars for the new Health Sciences Academy. The theme of the summit in 2003 was heavily focused on

Math and Science, and a significant part of that was a presentation on the Pitt County Schools Health Sciences Academy, an ambitious partnership and cutting edge program in its first year of success.

After several years of informal planning, including a feasibility study, the Health Sciences Academy was formally created in Pitt County Schools in January, 2000. The Academy is a partnership between the East Carolina University Division of Health Sciences, University Health Systems of Eastern North Carolina, Eastern Area Health Education Center (AHEC), Pitt Community College and Pitt County Schools. The Greenville-Pitt County Chamber joined the partnership as a sponsor in 2001 and provided administrative assistance as the academy was designed and developed. For more information on the Pitt County Schools Health Sciences Academy, contact Randy Collier at 252-830-4200.

In addition to math and science, No Child Left Behind was a major topic at that 2003 Summit as well. U.S. Under Secretary Eugene Hickok presented the federal viewpoint on NCLB which brought to light further implications of the Act on public schools. Superintendent Michael Priddy put a real world perspective on it for Pitt County.

The third Education Summit, held at Rock Springs Center on September 22, 2004, truly institutionalized the annual event in that it surpassed its predecessors in both attendance and private sector support. Entitled "The Health of Education," the agenda was designed to explore issues related to the health of children in the public schools. More than 260 people participated in the one-day event. Sponsors included DSM Pharmaceuticals, Inc., Blue Cross and Blue Shield of North Carolina, and University Health Systems of Eastern Carolina. Wachovia sponsored the OASIS Luncheon and Awards ceremony, during which more than 100 businesses were recognized for various levels of participation in that project.

The program featured panelists with high levels of experience and expertise in the management and delivery of health care to various segments of the population. It was designed to define problems prevalent among children of school age and to explore and recommend solutions for improving the general health of those children.

Following a precedent set in previous summits, the opening tone-setting remarks were delivered by Dr. Steve Ballard, Chancellor of East Carolina University, Dr. Dennis Massey, President of Pitt Community College, and Dr. Michael Priddy, Superintendent of Pitt County Schools.

In a panel discussion on the evolution and the magnitude of health problems led by Dave McRae, CEO of University Health Systems of Eastern Carolina, the wake-up call was dramatically captured in this statement: "The generation of youth now in schools may be the first to have a shorter life expectancy than their parents." (JAMA 2003: 187-193).

Dr. Ron Perkin, Chairman of the Department of Pediatrics at East Carolina University Brody School of Medicine, presented a statement of the problem in a profile of health statistics, some of which were gathered in The Youth Risk Behavior Survey administered in Pitt, Martin, and Duplin counties. According to data gathered in that survey, and confirmed in other studies, nearly 20% of middle school children are clinically overweight. Only 4% of children meet daily-recommended guidelines for a healthy diet.

The President and CEO of Blue Cross and Blue Shield of North Carolina, Robert Greczyn, addressed the economic impact on the escalating costs of providing health care insurance for treatment of illnesses related to unhealthy life-styles as opposed to making investment in their prevention. He identified pursuit of more and better health education and the nurturing of healthy lifestyles among the young as one of the best investments this generation can make in their overall education.

Among speakers making recommendations and proposing solutions were Dr. Marcus Plescia, Section Chief for Chronic Disease & Injury in the Division of N.C. Public Health, a panel of specialists from the Pitt County Schools led by Superintendent Michael Priddy, and representatives from the business community led by Dr. Nancy Anderson, Vice President of Human Resources at DSM Pharmaceuticals.

At registration every participant received a handbook with the day's agenda, profiles on all of the speakers, supporting documents on the day's topic, and a list of the OASIS Partners receiving awards at the Wachovia Luncheon.
